A new undergraduate degree course that offers a multidisciplinary training in the social sciences, from both a quantitative and a qualitative perspective.

The course provides students with multidisciplinary preparation which enables them to analyse the different facets of economic, political and social reality, both nationally and internationally.

Students will acquire the quantitative skills necessary for empirical analysis in the social sciences, and the interpretative tools to ask relevant questions and understand complex environments.

The course combines core teaching in economics and political sciences with training activities in statistics, management and law.

We expect students to find jobs in public administrations and private companies as specialists in management, economic and political sciences.

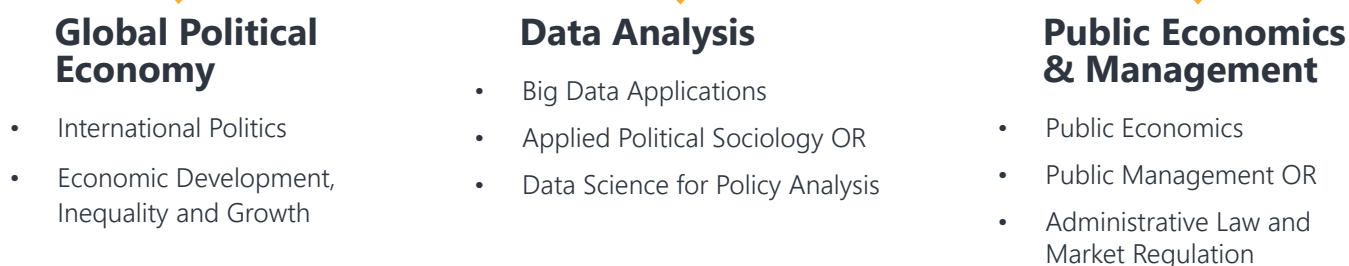

Graduates will also be able to gain access to any master's degree in economics, political science, management, law and statistics of their choice.
